PARTNERSHIPS TO SCALE UP INVESTMENT FOR INCLUSIVE AND SUSTAINABLE INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT (ISID)

4–5 November 2014

AIDE MEMOIRE

1. Building partnerships to leverage resources for extended inclusive and sustainable industrial development impact

In the last decade successful achievements of Millennium Development Goals have led to Poverty Reduction. However, development strategies, which have been implemented up-to-date, cannot attain the current challenges to concurrently address sustainable social, economic and environmental dimensions of our planet. More than 1 billion people are still living in extreme poverty and income disparities rise with a rapid pace within and among different countries.

New interlinked development strategies must be identified that call for integrated, sustainable and inclusive solutions fostering a generation of decent jobs, safe and universal energy access, sustainable cities, food security, access to clean water and sustainable agricultural production.

In this context, the United Nations post-2015 development agenda has reinforced the international community’s commitment to poverty eradication through, among others, inclusive and sustainable industrial development (ISID). To support this new mandate that UNIDO was given through the Lima Declaration 2013, the UNIDO Director General is convening two global Forums on ISID in 2014.

1a. First Forum: The first UNIDO ISID Forum, which took place on 23 and 24 June 2014, engaged Member States in a strategic dialogue, drawing on international expertise and regional knowledge, on how to formulate inclusive and sustainable industrial development strategies and policies. It also asserted the Organization’s role in promoting smart policies and innovative business models for ISID. Furthermore, it provided a global platform to debate on how to operationalize these strategies, according to international best practices and country tailor made solutions, including the support to the development of state-of-the-art business infrastructure and the industrial parks. The event drew more than 300 participants and high-level delegations from around 70 countries. Researchers and senior economists also participated in this conference.

1b. Outcome of the First Forum: The first Forum’s debates reflected the diversity of Member States experiences and views, as well as their understanding of both local and global interests, with a consensus of the need to extend impact of sustainable and inclusive development through tailor-made solutions for country and regional industrial requirements.

Panelists concluded that very often the market forces alone do not lead to a proper allocation of resources. Government has a role to play with regards to ensuring financial stability, food security, social and economic inclusion, and safeguarding the environment. However, modern collective actions through public-private partnerships can create institutional innovations that can effectively deal with public goods provision, such as hard and soft infrastructure and knowledge and information sharing. Individual firms are rarely in a position to provide this type of services. Collective actions are especially needed to support the growth of SMEs, which are generally flexible and innovative. SMEs, have a high potential for job creation and contribute considerably to the gross domestic product (GDP) of many countries, including developed countries.

Forum panelists further elaborated on instruments of inclusive and sustainable industrial policy-making. According to the shared experiences, the holistic and partner-based approach of industrial parks has emerged to be one of the instruments, which cut across different development strategies, such as those on investment generation, science and technology, innovation, job creation, education, and regional development. In addition, industrial parks have been successfully used as a testing ground for new reforms, policies and approaches to improve the business environment, as demonstrated in many East Asian countries. When these countries had limited resources, industrial parks helped solve business infrastructure problems in particular geographical areas and were used to overcome barriers to firm entry, attract foreign direct investment (FDI), foster skilled manpower, and facilitated the growth of local industrial SME clusters.

1c. Second Forum: The key outcomes of the first Forum serve as the foundation for this second Forum, underpinning confidence in well-structured partnerships for ISID. In line with the post-2015 development agenda, the second Forum aims to pilot the development of innovative partnership “business models” to implement ISID strategies. The main thrust behind the partnership business model is the mobilization of external partners and resources to extend the impact of UNIDO’s technical cooperation. UNIDO, through partnerships with governments, development finance institutions, UN agencies, multi-bilateral development agencies, civil society and the private sector, will have a much larger impact on the ground when its technical expertise is applied according to the needs of the government and combined with the financial muscles of financial institutions and the private sector.

2. The rationale of UNIDO’s Partnership approach: A catalytic role to increase aid effectiveness

UNIDO has already reaffirmed in the first Forum that sustainable development is closely connected to global systemic changes and that multiple actors are needed to facilitate a transformation to sustainable societies. ISID calls for larger resources than a development organization can individually provide.

Beyond UNIDO capacity-building services, an ISID momentum requires infrastructure, roads and utilities; furthermore, it calls for mechanisms and strategies which achieve concrete results in terms of market access, employment generation, attraction of foreign direct investment, technology upgrading, export development and foreign exchange earnings, equitable labor policies, particularly in terms of gender, wage levels and benefits, ultimately for environment sustainability. Financing such comprehensive development process postulates public and private capital.

UNIDO’s partnership approach is a holistic process including macroeconomic as well as institutional, social and environmental assets, of achieving consensus among the partners on the priorities and resources from local and global actors of business, governments, financial, research and academic institutions, multi-bilateral aid organizations and NGOs.

The approach calls for collective actions and catalyzes local and international development partners to provide the necessary support and knowledge, as well as to raise the financial resources that are needed for inclusive and sustainable achievements.
The process claims close co-operation with governments to create a conducive framework which is needed to attract the interest of private sector, through profitability and impact of development initiatives. The leading principle is not a blueprint scheme for all, but tailor-made partnerships with each beneficiary country keeping the ownership and guidance of the entire process, by defining its needs and required support and finally ensuring the success of its delivery.

This approach also takes into account the current scenario of emerging Southern countries building up significant capacities to contribute with Northern countries to address key current issues such as environment and climate change, energy, food and clean water security as well as global requirements for equitable growth. UNIDO's role is to facilitate the flow of available resources globally in the context of a global inclusive approach to the management of global problems, and also for building a wider foundation for sustainable economic growth.

To achieve this goal, the partnership approach aims to increase resource mobilization by strengthening cooperation between governments and the development financial sector to create workable frameworks that will reduce the risk or lower the cost of capital for investors in financing sustainable development.

This partnership approach should be developed in close cooperation with Development Financial Institutions (DFI) based on mutual interest, benefiting DFIs of UNIDO technical competence to screen their project portfolios and assess the interventions required to address common ISID challenges as well as to recommend pilot technical interventions/solutions at technology and market access levels. On the other hand UNIDO's limited technical cooperation resources are strategically invested, so as to leverage parallel flows of financial resources and trigger a tangible ISID impact.

To attain ISID goals, last but not the least, UNIDO has to meet the increasing interests of the financial and industrial private sector through engagement in poverty reduction. Especially in the last years, and affected by the global financial crisis, this has become the marquee trend in international development. An increasing number of private companies are seeking partnership opportunities to share in the responsibility of governments to raise the living conditions of the poor in our planet.

UNIDO is a strong advocate for, and experienced promoter of strategic partnerships with the private sector in development matters. Partnering with private businesses increases effectiveness and outreach in the achievement of ISID goals. Donors’ aid often lacks committed and capable implementing partners. While business partners not only have knowledge and capacities to make such partnered developmental initiatives possible, but can essentially contribute to the financing of the shared initiatives.

In a win-win scenario, UNIDO’s partnership approach ensures that private investors are not left alone in taking the risk to contribute with their own resources in initiatives with developmental outcomes; instead, they will be directly involved in its technical cooperation initiatives, securing their sustainability and replication for inclusive results.

All in all, through strategic partnerships, it is expected that the impact of UNIDO’s operation will extend well beyond the grant-funded, capacity-building assistance traditionally delivered. This this will be of additional benefit to UNIDO’s Member States. Through strategic partnerships, UNIDO will be in a stronger position to support Member States’ national ISID strategies. The benefits to the Member States of this approach will be demonstrated in two pilot countries. It should be noted that it is not only the recipient countries that will benefit from the partnership approach. Also, mid- and high income countries may identify investment opportunities and new markets.

Successful inroads were made by UNIDO in recent years towards sister UN agencies and private enterprises to scale up impact of technical cooperation delivery; partnerships are now extended to private investors and development finance institutions.

3. The roadmap for the second Forum

At the start, in order to reach a common level of understanding, UNIDO will brief Member States and major stakeholders on the approach of developing innovative partnership “business models”. A few pilot initiatives applied at country level for the development of ISID Programme for Country Partnerships (ISID-PCP) will be showcased as well.

The first ISID-PCP will be piloted in Africa, the Region currently most in need of ISID assistance. Two pilot countries have been selected in the Region: Ethiopia, in East Anglophone Africa and Senegal, in West Francophone Africa. It is expected that the ISID-PCP will demonstrate five main characteristics:

1. A strong country ownership;
2. A clear alignment to UNIDO’s ISID objectives;
3. A close alignment with the national resource mobilization strategies of the countries concerned, and the potential to scale up TC services through the establishment of partnerships;
4. An opportunity to deploy a multi-disciplinary array of UNIDO services; and
5. A rigorous monitoring and reporting mechanism so that our Member States and partners can measure the concrete benefits of this new approach.

Yet, the focus of this business model is not limited to the two pilot countries. It is an open process, which goes beyond to encompass various partnership opportunities for impact investment in all beneficiary countries that contribute to the achievement of ISID.

The two country pilot initiatives are expected to lead, through an action and partnership-based methodology, to the development of integrated impact investment plans. These are directed to finance institutional infrastructure for industry and/or industrial value chains, aimed at raising local value addition, as a strategy to expand job creation and reduce poverty, while preserving the environment.

A platform for discussion will be offered to partners to debate on new modalities to mobilize resources for ISID Programme for Country Partnerships as well as to engage in concrete follow-up actions to leverage technical, human and financial capacities for a more effective partnered delivery and better impact of technical cooperation.

This Forum is an opportunity to hear and to obtain valuable inputs from all Member States and to continue the discussions on how to operationalize ISID Program for Country Partnership in their respective countries.
4. Objective, Outcome and Outputs of the Forum

Objective
To extend impact and larger outreach of ISID goals through strengthening the partnership dialogue between UNIDO, recipient Governments, DFIs, other development agencies, private sector, and donors to scale up ISID investment in developing countries.
