Introduction

1. The guidelines for the functioning of the Investment and Technology Promotion Offices (then called Investment Promotion Services) were approved by the General Conference of UNIDO at its third session (resolution GC.3/Res.19 of 24 November 1989) and amended at its sixth session (decision GC.6/Dec.12 of 8 December 1995). Having taken into consideration significant programmatic and administrative changes in UNIDO since that time, the present document presents proposals to update the guidelines in the light of present realities.

I. BACKGROUND

2. The objective of the UNIDO investment and technology promotion programme is to help developing countries and countries with economies in transition to bridge the investment gap and the technology divide by strengthening their capacities to attract investment for industrial projects, to assist them in the acquisition of new technologies and in establishing sustainable mechanisms for the promotion of business alliances. In achieving these objectives, the programme relies on the Investment and Technology Promotion Offices (ITPOs).
3. Within the framework of implementation of the Business Plan, a comprehensive restructuring of the Investment Promotion Service Network was launched in 1998. To emphasize the integration of investment and technology promotion as stipulated by the Business Plan, the name was changed from Investment Promotion Services to Investment and Technology Promotion Offices. This also reflected the need to strengthen and expand UNIDO’s activities related to the transfer of industrial technologies as one of the most important components of industrial growth. Indeed, under suitable policy and business conditions, technology transfer can contribute to the development of capability in developing countries, which in turn leads to increased competitiveness in domestic and international markets.

4. Presently, there are ITPOs in Bahrain (Manama), Brazil (Recife), China (Beijing and Shanghai), France (Paris), Greece (Athens), Italy (Milan/Bologna), Japan (Tokyo), Poland (Warsaw), Republic of Korea (Seoul), Russian Federation (Moscow), and Slovakia (Bratislava). In addition, the Walloon region of Belgium takes part in the Network through a project based at UNIDO Headquarters in Vienna. The ITPO Network is complemented by technical assistance projects called Investment Promotion Units in Egypt, Jordan, Morocco, Tunisia and Uganda, all of which are financed by Italy. Under a cooperative arrangement with the Northwest Development Agency and Nimtech, a focal office was set up aiming to establish an ITPO in the United Kingdom.

5. Detailed information regarding the functioning of the ITPO network will be presented in a conference room paper, which will also highlight the most significant developments, including new initiatives and future direction.

II. PROPOSED GUIDELINES

6. In essence, the objectives, mandate and activities as well as funding, personnel and legal arrangements for ITPOs should remain unchanged. The amendments in the proposed text covering objectives, mandate and activities aim at reflecting the role of ITPOs in technology promotion and transfer. In addition, in view of the active involvement of countries with economies in transition in the ITPO Network, references to that group of countries need to be introduced throughout the guidelines along with references to developing countries.

7. The proposed revised guidelines are presented below for the consideration of the Board.
